Different courses are introduced at the UG and PG levels in order to provide a wide diversity in the learning process. There are about five UG programs and four PG programs. In addition to them, five add-on or value-added courses are introduced not only for the enrichment of the curriculum but also to expose the students to current trends in the world and to inculcate employability skills. The program outcomes, program-specific outcomes, and course outcomes are determined at the level of the board of studies and deans of faculties of the affiliated university. Based on those determined program outcomes and course outcomes, the heads of the departments defined and stated them at the institutional level in a suitable manner.

Program outcomes are defined to convey the objective of a program of study. Specifically, they are defined to make the learner understand what he or she should know or be able to do at the program conclusion. We often see program outcomes as the knowledge and skills students need to obtain by the time they complete their degree. Course outcomes are stated to define the knowledge, skills, attitudes, and behavior modes that students acquire at the end of the course. The principal decides program-specific outcomes by holding discussions with the heads of the departments and subject experts. All three are displayed on the college website for the notice of students and other stakeholders.

Teachers brief them on the orientation program organized for newly enrolled students. A copy of the POs, PSOs, and COs is displayed on the notice board of the college. The teachers of each course provide complete information on all three in their regular classes. The IQAC Coordinator monitors these activities under the guidance of the principal.

By understanding POs and COS, the students set their goals and study sincerely to attain them. Examinations held at the college and university levels serve as a means of understanding students' improvement in all aspects of learning. Quizzes, assignments, presentations, internal assessments, project work, study tours, etc. are practiced to understand students' ability to demonstrate knowledge, skills, and attitude formation by the end of their chosen course or program. POs, PSOs, and COs lead students in a particular area of study and portray what they can attain at the end of their program.
